“A Test of Multiple Frame Environments and Mediating Factors on Attitudes Toward Same-Sex Marriage and Civil Unions”

Committee: Michael S. Lewis-Beck (co-chair), David Redlawsk (co-chair), Tracy Osborn, Caroline Tolbert, Kevin Leicht (Sociology)

Abstract: This dissertation examines the effects of issue frames and individual-level mediating factors on attitudes towards same-sex marriage and civil unions. It employs three survey experiments to test both competing and non-competing frames, an advance which will clarify the effect of these environments on public opinion. It will also help unify the literature on factors, such as respondents' levels of political sophistication, which mediate the reception and processing of these frames by citizens. Finally, the dataset collected for this research will be of interest to scholars across the social sciences who are studying the factors affecting public opinion on highly divisive issues like same-sex marriage.
